Academic freedom

A GUEST EDITORIAL

A story from the deep past says that the trustees of a one-room school were trying to employ their teacher. One Trustee said, "Professor, what do you teach about the Earth-is it round or flat?" The answer was "I teach it both ways. If you gentlemen will tell me which theory you prefer, I will follow your

Today, by contrast, we have professors who seem quite indifferent to the wishes and beliefs of the taxpayers and the churches who pay their wages. In three great Eastern universities there have recently been agressive communists whose dismissal was requested by alumni but who were retained by the muthorities on the ground of academic freedom. Bertrand Russell is another illustration. This famous British mathematician and author was a professor in the University of California and while there he was a militant communist-atheist, also he attacked the institution of the family by taking a young woman into his home on the same basis as his wife. When patrons found this object lesson too rough the University invoked academic freedom.

(The old chap (Russell) is back in England now and was recently given a short prison term for misconduct in a pro-communist demonstration).

There is a regional association of colleges that can blackmail members who disregard their rules. Should our fine Mississippi Colleges look for guidcance to such organizations or to the citizenship of our own state with its Christian churches in every county and its almost universal belief in private property and the family? Our colleges were doing magniticent work before any such organizations existed.-By W. M. DRAKE

A challenge

For the past two weeks, with a jibe the week before, we have pictured on this page some of our "beauties" from garbage pits and outhouses to skeleton buildings. Some pictures were from our wealthier sections, some from our poorest. Between our own pictures (and more can be taken) and those taken by the Mississippi Health Department, we have a supply for several more weeks.

But the pictures of themselves are not the point. Our object is to point out the problem and suggest a colution. These unhealthy, unsightly and uncomfortable things need not exist in Bay St. Louis or the surrounding area. Perhaps thirty years ago many could have talked "poor mouth". We were in a depression then. Today we are tiding high, and even inancially it could be higher if we did more about our sanitation and allied problems. The other and ologer gains would be pure lagniappe.

These sores can be easily cleaned up and the reuctant made to do his share by law. Six years ago Greenville, Mississippi, now boosted as practically park, had about the same proportion of substandhouses we have and more privies as well as our ther eyesores and pollution spots. These figures are from Greenville's survey of that period and the givey of Bay St. Louis conducted early last year the Mississippi Board of Health.

Greenville did something. It passed an ordinance ith teeth in it and it enforces the ordinance. One ection of this ordinance is reprinted elsewhere on us page If we'll do the same we'll get a lot more people conting to live here and we'll eat even higher off te hag. And we won't be taking chances with our an or our children's lives nor ruining their values tout how things should be. But it didn't stop Sherman or Grant. Lee, his army continuing diminish in strength and will to resist, and with desertions decimating the ranks, was forced to withdraw. ## A Conservative View By James J. Kilpatrick

Those of us who are critical of Mr. Johnson's Great Society have a responsibility, or so it ems to me, to make it clear just why we think the President is wrong,

It comes down to this: if the ends were all that mattered, there would be nothing wrong with the Great Society. It would be a marvelous thing, to live in a land in which all children were educated to the limited flieir capacity, all men were decently housed, all sicknesses were cured, and all the highways were cleared of litter. To read over the several presidential messages is to catch a glimpse of purest paradise.

But it was Macaulay who once remarked that an acre in Middlesex is better than a principality in Utopia. The ends are not all that matter. The great fault in the Great Society is not in the cost or the concept, but in the violence that would be done to the federalist system under dur Constitution. To reach his glorious ends, Mr. Johnson would simply brush aside all the old restraints upon the powers of the federal government. He would reduce the states to mere administrative dependencies and convert a once self-reliant people into a flock of contented sheep. To embrace the Greet Society, in the Johnson version, is to embrace a centralization of authority that our fathers wisely have rejected.

We never turn back sufficiently to fundamentals. The grand design of this republic, from the very beginning, has contemplated a federal government of limited powers. The authority that is delegated to the Congress "to lay taxes and provide for the common defense and general welfare, is not an open-ended grant to spend money on any venture the Congress may favor. "It is evident," said Madison, "that there is not a single power whatever, which may not have some reference to the common defense, or the general welfare nor a power of any magnitude which in its exercise does not involve or admit an application of Mr. Johnson's proliferating proposals must constantly be weighed in terms of our constitutional "Whenever money is to be applied to a particular measure," in the Madisonian view, a question arises, whether the particular authority be within the enumerated authorities vested in Congress." The trouble with much of the Johnsonian program is that no such authority exists, or that it exists only by a sophistical stretching of our fundamental law.

As an abstract proposition, who is not in favor of good housing, better schools, more beautiful cities? How is it possible to oppose federal grants for libraries, hospitals, college dormitories, the training of local police? The enswer must be that when public housing is justified in the name of the power to raise and support armies (which was the bland selection, back in the days when these questions were debated), the Constitution is being perverted and we are better off without the public housing.

These days such questions are not much debated; the general welfare clause is viewed as a soft and woolly blanket that snugly covers us all. The city council that is invited to accept a federal grant for the laying of local sewers seldom asks "how come?" It only asks "how much?" and the college president, tempted by a fat grant from Wa over questions of check and balance. If he doesn't take it, somebody else will.

The danger in all this is that the strength and energy and variety of the federalist system must inevitably be drained away. The people in their towns and counties and states will continue to make some decisions, but the primary decisions will be made by some other men, some place else. Programs of public welfare already are controlled by the grant of federal funds. State roads increasingly are built to federal standards. Public education stands next in line, And just down the road stand the clinics and hospitals and health centers of the Great Society.

Perhaps the people of the United States want it this way; if so, a decent respect for ancient institutions should prompt them to amend their constitution and not to ignore it. My own guess is that the people do not truly want the greater centralization of power that is implicit in Mr. Johnson's designs; on reflection, they may conclude that the real world of Middlesex beats the dream world of Utopia. To borrow again from Macaulay: "Nothing is se galling to a people, not broken in from birth, as a paternal or, in other words, a moddling government, a government which tells them what to read and say and est and drink and wear."

it's really lots of fun, and ever so much more exciting not. to know who will be seated on the throne when the lights go on in the Academy gym on the night of the ball, And before our phone starts to ring like mad, let us hasten to assure all that we haven't the faintest idea who will wear the crowns this year. Like everyone else, we will just have to wait until they are introduced to the audience, because it's easier to find a key to

Celebrating 33 years

Helen Plunkett was lovely in dusty rose brocade when she and Joe welcomed the large group of well-wishers attending their 33rd wedding anniversary party at their home last Saturday night. An enormous centerpiece of orchids was featured on the serving table. Among their guests were Clara and George Seuzenesu, Rita and Sonny Wolfe, Mrs, Roger Boh, Aileen and Charlie Gottschalk, Mary Stachle, the Earl Buckleys, Mary and Booey Blanchard, Joan and Red Glass, Pat and Joe Viguerie, Johnnie and Boh Akers, Rosemary McFarland, Lily Ann Kalmbach and from New Orleans son Ken's best girl, Elizabeth Villere and Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. #### Hole in one winner

Barline (Mrs. Walter) Russo's name must be entered on our list of local sports calabrities as she in play at P.C. Isles Tuesday. She received a whole gallon of bonded booze for her feat. It couldn't have happened to a more deserving girl, but sort of a waste as neither Barlene or Walter are thirsty types.

We're most happy to hear that two of our favorite people came up with top honors at the annual Jaycee awards banquet last Saturday night, Merle (Mrs. Bert) Stieffel was Jaycette of the year and Outstanding committee chairman and Young Man of the Year is none other than Andre Arceneaux.

Off to the inaugural

Fred Curet left for Washington and the inauguration Saturday and paved the way for Bea Georgi to jet up Sunday night, as by some miracle he secured a hotel reservation for her.

There's always a good reason for any drastic weather change in these parts and we're glad to discover what caused our first freeze so late in the season. All who had tickets to the ALL-Star game were unhappy, but the sheriff. Sylvan Ladner, was more than a little disappointed as he had stacks to distribute to local school children. By the way, Sylvan's shiner is the result of minor eye surgery performed in Gulfport last week. . . he did not bump into a door, or anything,
